The Lolo use extremely simple implements and have hardly any furniture in their rooms. Wooden objects such as beds, chairs, tables and stools are nonexistent in the I region. The only furniture--generally found in the home of the well-to-do Heh-I--consists of one or two wooden cupboards, in which are kept containers for ch'ao-mien, wooden bowls used at meals, and other articles of daily use, as well as things which they regard as family heirloom (such as certificates of award given by the government.) Close to the back wall of the center room there is a huo-k'ang /stove/, which is generally square and sometimes slightly oblong, though there are also round-shaped ones. Three stones forming a triangle and set within the huo-k'ang constitute what is called kuo-chuang, upon which a large iron pot is placed. The Lolo and the Tibetans use the same equipment for their kuo-chuang, but while the latter use an iron tripod to support the pot, the former use three pieces of stone, irregular in size in the ordinary I family but regular and attractively carved with designs and ornaments in the family of the well-to-do Heh-I. Furthermore, the Tibetans use their pot only for boiling tea to drink with tsamba, whereas the Lolo use it to cook all their food, except ch'ao-mien which is edible when mixed with unboiled water. The I never drink tea or boiled water, but only unboiled water whenever thirsty. This practice is most unsanitary. /107/ At any rate, in the I family, the kuo-chuang is regarded as something sacred. Should one ignore this fact and step across the kuo-chuang in a moment of carelessness or perhaps hang wet stockings above it to dry, he would cause serious protest or even violence. Likewise, one must not violate the wooden cupboards placed against the back wall of the room.

The I are more advanced than the Tibetans in that they eat cooked food and have a more complete set of eating utensils. At least in this aspect of their living, they have been influenced by the Chinese. Aside from bowls they also use chopsticks and ma-shih-tzu (little round wooden spoons with long handles, used for mixing soup). They have an especially large iron pot, with a diameter of about three feet, which is used for cooking and placed over the kuo-chuang. It is bought from the Chinese for the I do not know how to smelt iron. They burn firewood in the huo-k'ang. But like the Chinese they know only how to cut down the forest, but not how to preserve and cultivate it. Since the large trees have already been felled in most of the areas, they now have to resort to picking up odd pieces of dried branches to burn as brushwood. Fuel supply has become a serious problem in the sparsely populated Liang-shan.
